There really isn’t enough time to sit there and calculate the answer to this odd question. Instead, show the employers how you would go about finding the answer. First, you would research how many buildings there are, then, say that each building has 12 windows, and then multiply the amount of time spent on one window by the rest of the ...

First published in 1991, I didn’t read Naomi Wolf’s stunning nonfiction book, “The Beauty Myth: How Images of Beauty Are Used Against Women,” until April 2019. This book remains as insightful, important, and valid as the year it was published. A number of reviewers on Goodreads have called this book “dated.” I absolutely disagree.
