The Canon 5DS and 5DS R are the world's best DSLRs. They are 99% the same thing, and I'll refer to them interchangeably instead of having to write "5DS and 5DS R" a thousand times below. You can pay more for the Canon 1D-X if you need a camera that shoots at more than 5 frames per second or need to subject it to severe physical abuse, while the ...

The 5DS and 5DS R are equipped with 50.6MP full-frame CMOS sensors, while the 5D Mark IV has a 30.4MP full-frame CMOS sensor. The 5DS cameras win easily here. If your work relies on having the most detail and resolution possible, such as with product, macro, or general studio work, the 5DS R is the obvious choice, since

Such filters soften the image slightly, so the low-pass effect is cancelled in the EOS 5DS R for the sharpest possible performance. The small risk of artefacts as a consequence of this makes EOS 5DS R a good option when shooting outdoors or in controlled studio conditions, but for other applications the EOS 5DS may be a better choice.

If I look too closely, my EF 50mm f/1.2 L on my 50MP 5DS/R looks broken by comparison to the sharpness I get from the new RF 50mm f/1.2 L on my merely 30 MP EOS R. At f/1.2, the new lens makes the EOS R sharper than my 5DS/R, especially when you realize that focus is also so much more accurate and consistent on the EOS R.
